1. The Goal of the Vikings

The vikings were a group of scandanavian people, especially form Norway that raided as many locations they could possibly do. They did not do this for a necessity but pure out of power, wealth, social status. It all reflected ambition and not because of necessity of scarce resources. That's why they were called barbarians since they only acted out of personal pride, to show off to others and get honored as strong and powerful over other populations.
